The history

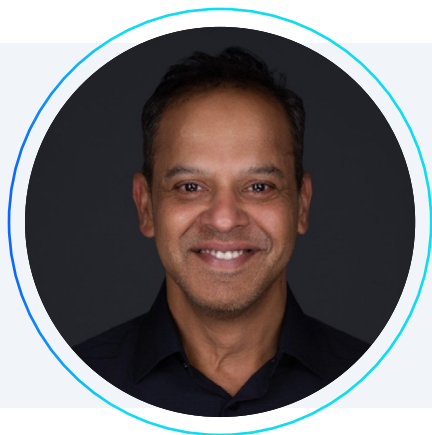

Wasabi is on a mission to store the world's data by making cloud storage affordable, predictable, and secure. With Wasabi, visionary companies gain the freedom to use their data whenever they like without being hit with unpredictable fees or vendor lock-in.

Wasabi is disrupting the cloud storage market by offering a high-performance, cost-effective service that outpaces competitor offerings.

With multiple exabytes of storage deployed across data centers in North America, Europe, and Asia, Wasabi is recognized as one of the technology industry's fastest-growing companies.

Staying ahead of exponential growth is fundamental to Wasabi's mission to deliver seamless, reliable data storage solutions for customers. This requires a future-proof infrastructure model that can keep pace with Wasabi's global expansion.

Colocation offered Wasabi the critical advantage of accessing high-density data center facilities, advanced connectivity, and scalable power infrastructure without the complex and capital-intensive burden of building and maintaining its own dedicated data centers.

"The technical capabilities Flexential offers are crucial, but what truly sets our partnership apart is the strong human relationship we've developed. It's not just about managing our data center; it's about having dedicated team members who are actively looking to enable and grow our business."

Vice President, Operations

The challenge

Explosive growth called for a decisive partnership

As Wasabi grew, the decision to establish a data center on the West Coast was a strategic milestone. Finding the right colocation partner was critical to the strategy, requiring a provider who could not just offer space but truly understand Wasabi's high-growth infrastructure needs.

“We had a high standard for requirements around reliability, connectivity, protection from environmental factors, and cost-effectiveness,” said Vin Antarkar, Vice President, Operations. “When we evaluated the options available, Flexential definitely stood out from the competition.”

Wasabi’s initial engagement with Flexential quickly transformed into a partnership built on trust, responsiveness, and strategic collaboration.

Details: Wasabi’s colocation partner needed to transcend the role of a conventional service provider—they sought a collaborator who would champion their growth while upholding rigorous performance, reliability, and security standards.
